

Socially Responsible Products

Good and Green Products can add new meaning to your incentive programs and are good for business. From gourmet brownies to spa gift sets, utilizing products that were manufactured by a social purpose business creates added value for the sponsoring company and the recipient, while giving back to the community.

Helping Hand Rewards serves as a conduit and a catalyst between social purpose businesses that produce merchandise and incentive companies. Helping Hand Rewards builds relationships between businesses seeking to demonstrate their commitment to supporting socially responsible initiatives and the grassroots organizations that create opportunities for people to improve their lives. The following organizations operate social purpose businesses that manufacture world-class products available for a wide range of incentive programs. Each organization can provide products in bulk or can drop ship directly to customers.

Mission

Women Helping Other Women, Inc. (WHO Women) was founded in 2004 by women to help other women who find themselves in difficult situations. It is their way of giving back to the community in which they live. They offer training, education and employment to women who have had to seek refuge in a domestic violence center. Their goal is to serve as a catalyst by offering help and hope along their way back to a productive life. WHO Women also works with the Mountain Opportunity Center in their community to provide work opportunities for developmentally disabled adults. MOC comes in and cleans the facility as well as fold thousands upon thousands of brochures each year. This year they have a larger facility and plan to utilize MOC to come in the distribution center and help with packaging. Their proceeds go back into the community in the form of scholarships to either women from the DVC or to high school graduates who may otherwise find it hard to finance an education. All their products are made from original recipes developed in their kitchen.
